About the Speaker

Mostafa Minawi is an assistant professor of history at Cornell University and the director of the Ottoman and Turkish Studies Initiative. His research focus is the late 19th century social and diplomatic history of the Ottoman Empire and he travels extensively in Europe, the Middle East, and East Africa as he continues to conduct his research. He also is a regular commentator on the social and political events in Turkey, and their relation to the developments in the region as well as European and American international policies.
